Symptoms to Solution

Gastric symptoms like abdominal pain, bloating and nausea not only have a big impact on your life.

It can be hard for doctors to identify the problem, leaving you searching for answers and frustrated by your condition. Fortunately, there's a new test that can help, called Gastric Alimetry.

What is Gastric Alimetry?

Gastric Alimetry, also known as body surface gastric mapping, is a breakthrough, non-invasive test used to diagnose functional gastric disorders.

How does it work?

The Gastric Alimetry test is noninvasive, with a sticky patch of sensors and a recording device placed onto the skin over your stomach.

Similar to an ECG for the heart, your stomach is also a muscle. The device reads your stomach's activity and provides doctors with data patterns that may relate to certain conditions. Meaning your doctor will have a clearer picture of the issue that's causing your symptoms.

Where can I access the test

Gastric Alimetry is FDA cleared and being used across the world at world-leading gastric centres.

In the United Kingdom, it is available at our clinics in Manchester, Cambridge and London, the test gives healthcare professionals a more accurate picture of what's happening in the stomach.

What does the test involve?

1. Wear the Device

A sticky patch is applied to the surface of your abdomen, where it senses and collects signals for 30 minutes while your stomach is empty.

2. Consume a standardised meal

You'll be given a light meal, after baseline fasted recordings, then we have 4-hours of post-meal recordings to see how your stomach responds to food.

3. Rest while it records

You'll sit comfortably in a recliner chair, free to read, watch a movie, use a device or get out of the chair for a comfort break. The patch will keep on working.

4. Record your symptoms

You'll be prompted every 15 minutes to update your symptoms on an App. This will provide real-time symptom changes for your clinician to interpret.

5. Get your results

We will generate a Gastric Alimetry report from all the data collected. Your doctor will then share the results with you and use the report to create a treatment plan.
